"I PROPER LOVE PENGUINS" – PART 2 ARTICLE

Somewhat disappointed that his admittedly interpretive introduction wasn't enough to inspire floods of tears from his audience (people just don't know art when they see it), Mr Hunter was forced to explain that we at Meadowcroft need to set an example. With waste plastic being a critical issue for the environment because of human behaviour, both Mr Hunter and Mr Hinman made a point of showcasing the consequences of such behaviour on animals (most of it heart-breaking). Discussing how dangerous certain plastics are, like what a six-pack holder can do to an unsuspecting bird, had Marco mortified.

Summer, a more senior pupil at the Hub and recent binger of David Attenborough's new series (Our Planet), was particularly vocal about the issues facing our world. When the conversation moved on to human caused emissions, Summer had plenty more to say; "Our ice-caps are melting... that's no good for penguins. I proper love penguins" was a quote for the ages. Ultimately the message was clear; to be more conscientious regarding our disposal of waste, prompting our students to better appreciate our world and utilise the recycling bins Mr Agar has recently installed (a pro-earth advocate if I ever met one).

"The planet respects us, so we should respect it!"

I MEAN LOOK AT IT, AIN'T IT
PRETTY?!
